THE NEWSPAPER'S STAFF REPORTER

ISLAMABAD: Celebrating the launch of its 'Women in Leadership Programme in South Asia', the British Council has reiterated its commitment towards taking more effective initiatives to increase women's contribution in all areas of life.

During the event, panelists called for more vigorous efforts to ensure that an enabling environment is created to build the capacity of women.

The British Council organised the programme to train women in Bangladesh, India, Pakistan and Sri Lanka.

According to a statement, inspired by Her Majesty the Queen's 70-year service and leadership, this training programme was launched under which a network of 100 young female leaders in Bangladesh, India, Pakistan, Sri Lanka and the United Kingdom was built.

This programme offered 100 emerging young leaders (25 each from these four states), a learning opportunity through an eight-week online, self-access leadership course to become more effective in leading interventions to support gender equality and women's leadership within their respective sectors.
